King Henry, IV , Act. 11. It is to be regretted that so intelligent an individual as "E. F." can find no better employment than "dodging" about Washington after "our ladies;" and then, too, to have the conscience to screw out of the dear creatures how much of their husbands and brothers "hard" earnings they have "lavished" upon the "milliners and mantua-makers!" and, worse than all, to publish the results of his arduous day's labor. "This was the most unkindest cut of all;" and I suggest, that if he does not permanently "excuse" himself "from further attendance" upon them, they may be brought to give him notice to quit, rather more feelingly than would be agreeable to bis ears. But, seriously, if "E F." really desires "our" people to stay away from Washington, I put it to him in all earnestness and good faith, whether it will not be well to set them the example?

derstand it, is this :-- As many boats as you please may ply between here and Washington, at any hours and at any price; but if Congress shall repair the Long Bridge, so as to enable such of us as have urgent business in Washington, to get there, when the river is frezen, or when there are fogs upon it, or the tide is too high, or the wind is blowing briskly, or the boats are chasing one another about, or coolly resting from their labors at their respective wharves, or gone off with pleasure parties, or towing vessels, or being inspected, or laid up for repairs, "our" shopkeepers may take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded, and go to Washington to obtain a supply of some article they are tomporarily out of, or some "ladics" may go there t) procure such things as are not to be obtained advantageously here. If this be his argument, I leave it to its fate.

But if he contends that of right, there should be absolutely no communication with cles shall be put in the way of cheap and frequent intercourse between the two cities; that "our large railways" shall carry no passengers, but such as design to stop here; that persons living in Washington, and doing business here, shall not have facilities for getting here; that such of u- as have settled here, and expended our means here, expressly because of our contiguity to Washington, shall be cut off from its advantages; that our merchants and visitors arriving in Washington at 7 p. m., shall stay there all night, notens volens. If, I say, this be his design, I suggest the following plan for effectually carrying it out, viz:- That without delay we pro to enter or leave this station after sundown." G. H.

At a meeting of many of the citizens of the county on Monday, January 25th, on motion of Col. Francis McCormick, seconded by T. P. Pendleton, Howard F. Thornton, esq., was called to the Chair, and P. D. Shepherd appointed Secretary.

unanimously adopted: Whereas, At a recent meeting of the Common Council of the town of Alexandria, a series of resolutions, hereunto appended, were, by the said Common Council, accepted, and ordered to be printed; | the resolutions refferred to, are those offered by Mr. T. M. Monroe: which resolutions display, upon the part of the Common Council, a deimportant public improvement, the Loudown and Hampshire Railroad; and to concentrate in the Manassas Gap Railroad, the entire control of all railroad trade from this valley, the immediate result of which step, we apprehend, would be an effort, on the part of those thus designing to control this Valley trade, to annihilate for ever all railroad communication between this Valley and infinitely its most important market, the large and interesting city of Baltimore:-
